WRITER/DIRECTOR/PRODUCER STATEMENT

I wrote Love In The Time Of Condoms as a way of spinning off cliché movies from the late-80s/early-90s, while at the same time, dealing with the backwards issues of the day. By keeping the cinematography on a classical approach, and having the comedy get a bit raunchy at times, it plays with the dynamic of the scene and the characters, commenting on over-done teen comedy ideas and the ideas that uphold filmmaking even today. I had the lead actor play the role as naively as possible, to give the scenes and his character this youthful, innocent sense, which helps the comedy play a bit stronger in the dirtier moments. In the end, the film remains a commentary on cliché teen comedies from my childhood with a classic filmmaking approach to the cinematography and narrative visual storytelling.
